Still More Honors for Debut Novel, "The Dark Dreamweaver"—Named an iParenting Media "Greatest Product of 2005"

BALTIMORE, MD: Right alongside products from such companies as Scholastic, Fisher Price, Discovery, and Disney, The Dark Dreamweaver—the first children's book published by tiny Imaginator Press of Baltimore and its author's a debut novel—was named one of the "Greatest Products of 2005" by iParenting Media.

The prestigious competition draws thousands of entries a year, with many of the winners drawn from the ranks of America's top children's product companies: Lego, Hasbro, Baby Einstein, and Nickelodeon, to name a few more examples.

Said publisher Sheila Ruth, "It's very gratifying after taking a chance on an unknown author to see that the book continues to be recognized for quality. I think the sequel is even better, and I look forward to the new book earning accolades as well."

The award is the latest honor for a book that has already been...

- Named an American Booksellers Association Book Sense Children's Pick
- A Finalist for the prestigious Benjamin Franklin Award.
- Praised in major review outlets including Heartland Review, Midwest Book Review, and Independent Publisher
